

Should students be paid for doing well in school?

NO!!!!!!

*Our school should not implement a plan to pay students for good grades because students will not learn the value of hard work if they are paid for their grades or test scores. If students are compensated for doing well in school, they will only work hard while they get paid. Once the compensation stops, they won't study as hard anymore. In addition, *students may become demoralized if they study really hard and still don't do well enough to get paid. Although it takes a lot of persistence to study hard and achieve in school, it is worth the effort. Students are more likely to become independent, life-long learners if they are not paid to do well.